Dear Commissioners:

My name is Scott Killingsworth, and I have lived in Arizona for 6 years. I have a number of close friends who are very sensitive to the harmful effects of electromagnetic frequencies (EMF). Some of them subsist entirely on small monthly disability payments, which sometimes fail to meet their basic expenses.

For the sake of my friends, plus the many other Arizona residents on fixed incomes who are concerned about the very legitimate health risks of so-called "smart meters," I urge you to insist that Arizona utilities charge only a very reasonable fee (or preferably no fee at all) to any customer who requests an opt-out from smart meters on their property. A very fair example is Tucson Electric, which charges opt-out customers $5 per month to keep their old electromechanical meters.

In short, I ask you to consider the health and financial well-being of Arizona customers as important as the profits of utility companies. Thank you very much for listening.

Sincerely,

Scott Killingsworth
