WESTERN DIAMONDBACK RATTLESNAKE

The western Diamondback Rattlesnake can live to be 30 years old and grows to 7 feet long. Rattlers feed on small mammals like rabbits, gophers and pack rats. They can eat prey that weighs as much as itself. They can go several weeks between feedings. Baby rattlers are born with fangs and venom and are dangerous at birth. The mother delivers from 4 to 25 live baby snakes and abandons the nest at birth.

GAMBEL'S QUAIL

The Gambel's Quail is nearly as much a symbol of southeastern Arizona as the saguaro cactus and the roadrunner. Its early morning call from a fence post or other elevated perch is a welcoming sound to the desert stroller. The most numerous species of quail in the Southwest, it's equally at home in the remote desert or suburban backyards.
