New codes may not be necessary

Hello? This is 2000, not 1890. Geography should only be one consideration for area codes. Usage should also be considered. Beepers and cell phones could have their own set of area codes, since they have no fixed geographic location. Also, non-voice lines, such as fax and computer connections, could have non-geographic related area codes. Doing this would reduce the number of times that new geographic area codes would have to be created and lessen the impact on residential users.
