Gentlemen, the latest attack by APS follows a sorry history of the electrical generation industry and energy conservation. In the past the industry encouraged conservation measures and then claimed those measures were reducing income and demanded rate increases. Now the same scenario is unfolding. After encouraging individual investment in solar systems suddenly there is a problem with APS income and dividend disbursement to investors. This is a corporation with access to large staffs including engineers and accountants. Unfortunately this follows the script used in other energy conservation efforts. If APS is to be believed there should never have been any investment in any energy indicative by consumers.

My question is why did they lure homeowners to invest in a system that their staff certainly could have, should have, and may well have advised was going to reduce income and/or disadvantage other categories of customers? Now those stressed homeowners from the recent housing collapse, many of which were senior citizens on limited budgets, who invested hard earned dollars in roof top solar systems face egregious cost increases!

Gentlemen in this battle APS is the goliath. APS has access to engineering and accounting resources beyond an average persons reach. In this issue your support for the individual solar investor is absolutely essential and urgently requested.
