Charging residential properties for the meter is acceptable, someone has to pay for it, and it should be the one that benefits from it. However, $50 - $100 / month seems excessive and seems to be a revenue stream for APS rather than to cover their cost. As to the amount paid for the electricity - again it should be fair. The residential owner is now part of a network and is not set up as an electricity generating business, thus the wholesale rates seems fair. But APS also benefits from this and it did not have to provide power to the residence at the retail rate. Thus a rate in between might be more appropriate.
