Two months ago I made a down payment on a solar electric system for our house. Since then I have been following some of the news regarding APS asking for more money to maintain the infrastructure for carrying the electricity. On our recent bill, $106, almost $13 is for delivery of power. I presume this cost has been on bills for all eternity. So.....APS is getting paid for building and maintenance of the lines that bring power to the house. I am ok with that. If many people go solar will they need more lines or new equipment that isn't paid for as part of the solar installation? If you allow APS and other Arizona utility companies to pile extra charges on the solar consumer then, what will eventually happen as battery technology improves and gets cheaper people will go off the grid.

Some random thoughts:

Arizona should be a poster child for solar generation and use. If solar was really actively encouraged by government and the private sector it would certainly help generate a green economy. That's a good thing!

Isn't "going green" a positive thing. We want to get away from coal, nuclear and even gas generation of electricity.

Even if many people go solar, APS can sell excess power for more than it buys it from individuals and companies who have solar electric.

I hope you will do what is for the greater good in making decisions regarding solar electric for Arizona.

Sincerely Bill Morgan
