Simply stated that the poor can not afford solar. That the poor are bearing the cost of solar because they can not afford it is incorrect. Companies like Solar City provide very inexpensive solar leases which increase electrical efficiency. The APS argument like the previous TEP argument are incorrect and only consider units purchased; however, in both cases the grid is not damaged, because the load stays in a local area and does not cause an imbalance within the complete system. This decreases maintenance and transmission costs. It does not increase them for the utility companies. Penalizing solar users and producers for the utilities lack of planning is not appropriate.
