We have not dropped out of the race, and I will be submitting my $5 donations soon. Folks Lucy Mason and I are in it to win it.

Solar executives tell me that whether their companies thrive or perish depends on the decisions of the Commission. Here I urge the media to cover the campaign of out-of-state solar interests – $200,000 in deceptive signs, so far – against the candidate, Doug Little, who may help determine the rates Arizonans pay for electricity. Kim Owens I watched the debate and as someone who is very interested in both water and power, for these candidates to not offer their perspective to the voters on those very important issues sends a huge message. Perhaps they are more afraid of being shown up by their weakness on the issues rather than any perceived "boogie man" they may try to conjure up as a straw man. I sincerely like Sandra but it appears she likes the taxpayer-funded video produced by the Commission even more. She's "borrowed" our video and made it into a campaign piece. I never anticipated appearing in her campaign video, and I'm certain the Commission's staff didn't, either. Rather expensive in-kind "contribution" to a Clean Elections candidate, no?

Joel Lawson I remember talking with a friend (Lewis Tenney) telling him I like the idea of personal solar because they can't attach taxes and fees to it. He said, they'll find a way. Man was he right! I noticed the main solar and wind goes to large corporations so they can charge and tax us forever. When was it decided that we had to pay government for the right to have power. So the greens want solar energy but the corporations don't want to lose the profits and the government does not want to give up the long term taxing opportunity. The carpetbaggers are behind it all.

June 26 at 6:30pm · Like

Bob Stump Joel, this is not about taxes – it's about ensuring that all users of the grid (including solar users, since they are indeed connected to it) pay their fair share for using it. If solar users do not then non-solar users have to pick up the tab. It has been cleverly framed as a "tax on the sun," when it is anything but. No one is making a "profit" on ensuring that the cost-shift I just described is rectified. And the government is making nothing on it.

June 26 at 6:33pm · Like · 2

Bob Stump You pay APS, SRP, etc., for the ability to have power when the sun is not shining, among other things. So I'm not sure what you mean by "pay[ing] government for the right to have power."

June 26 at 6:36pm · Like · 1

Joel Lawson Bob, I was referring to solar instead of the grid concerning the taxes. I was not thinking about those on both. Rural point of view, but still giving them tax money so they will install solar and then charge a tax or fee because they did. BUT I have argued that the cost of extensions should be shared so I can't say maintaining it should not be shared if you're using it.

June 26 at 6:53pm · Like · 1

Bob Stump Thanks, Joel - the two go hand-in-hand, since everyone who uses electricity uses the grid and the entire distribution system, etc.

Bob Stump, based on your recent Facebook and Twitter posts, I can only assume you are going to be very active in this race against Lucy Mason and me. I have always viewed the Corporation Commission as a quasi-judicial office, thus it seems highly unusual for a current member, especially the Chairman of the Commission, to endorse, and actively engage in activity opposing candidates from his own party. I hope we have an opportunity to serve together and defend the ratepayer against the millions of dollars spent by special interest groups.

Bob Stump Vernon, I'm a little bewildered by your post. I have not singled you out for criticism, and I look forward to campaigning vigorously for you and my friend Lucy, should you win the primary. Endorsing Doug and Tom is not equivalent to campaigning "against" you or "opposing" you. I have been mildly critical of the ADC candidates (you, Lucy and the two Democrats) who attended the recent TUSK solar rally - ironically, on the very basis on which you criticize me. The Commission is a quasi-judicial office, and I find it unusual for Commission candidates to attend a rally hosted by any so-called special interest which has business before the Commission while simultaneously campaigning against the candidates to attend a rally hosted by any so-called special interest which has business before the Commission while simultaneously campaigning against the supposed influence of precisely these "special interests." The only two "special interests" that collectively spent "millions of dollars" were APS (Pinnacle West) and TUSK and its solar affiliates. Obviously, attending a pro-APS political event would also be inappropriate, to my mind. You say it's "highly unusual for a current member...of the Commission to endorse." And yet you have sought the endorsement of a couple of my Commission colleagues. Endorsements of potential future Commissioners have nothing whatsoever to do with the quasi-judicial nature of the office; attending political rallies hosted by entities with enormous regulatory interests before the Commission - and which may engage in independent expenditures - certainly do. Of course, as you know, many officeholders endorse in primaries, so it is "hardly unusual" for me to endorse Doug Little and Rep Tom Forese. I was endorsed by all of the sitting Commissioners - including the chairman - when I ran for the Commission. You did not ask for my endorsement, or contact me about your candidacy, so I'm not sure what else to say. I should add that many Republicans are concerned about Todd Landfried's apparent involvement in your race. Todd is the former Executive Director of the Maricopa County Democratic Party, associate of Randy Parraz, and a far-left solar acolyte. He has unleashed his vitriol on Gary, Brenda, Susan and me on several occasions. I understand he is assisting your team in gathering fives and videotaping GOP candidates at events. Anyway you are always welcome in my office, and my concerns are nothing personal. I do wish you the best, and I appreciate your service, as well. I try to avoid on-line back-and-forth commenting, so this will be my final comment. Thanks.

Jim Holway commits unforgivable Democratic apostasy when he acknowledges reality by saying "We need to continue...the coal and the nuclear power that have been the foundation of our economy." What? Arizona can't be powered exclusively by renewable energy, as many of a leftward persuasion believe? He falters by saying the Commission's Republican majority "doesn't represent the diversity of our state," even though the state elected us and, by that logic, at least one seat should be held by an independent.

To my mind neither TUSK nor APS is a "special interest " Both have exercised their First Amendment rights with vigor. If candidates for the Corporation Commission are going to run on the hackneyed fiction that "special interests" have a grip on the Commission, however, it is odd for them to attend a rally organized by one of those so-called special interests

Jim seems like a thoughtful, pleasant guy, but this is rife with errors. The co-ops aren't subject to the REST's energy requirements; some states count energy efficiency toward their renewable energy goals, so comparing Arizona's standard to those of other states requires apples-to-apples comparisons; no candidate is proposing to reduce the REST, with multipliers a 20 percent standard could end up being much smaller than Arizona's 15 percent requirement.

Jackie Thrasher Is there an apples-apples comparison? Where does Arizona fall in such a case?

June 6 at 6:10pm Like 1

Bob Stump Jackie, I remember well our discussions about who was the evil wizard, in Parsifal...In terms of states who have higher or lower standards, my best estimate is that Arizona is lower middle. SRP, which we don't regulate, skews the numbers in several categories. The gradual ramping up helps protect ratepayers, of course, and the Solar Energy Industries Association ranked Arizona #2 last year, of the top 10 solar states. APS is third among utilities in annual solar MW. There has been a steady monthly increase since January for PV applications received in APS territory. The goal, in my view, is to minimize ratepayer impacts while also promoting a diverse energy portfolio. A feed-in tariff or higher REST standard would impact ratepayers dramatically.

CBS-5 needlessly increases public cynicism, time and again. Politicians sponsor bills they'd otherwise oppose for a slab of beef? To suggest that Sens. Yarbrough and Barto - decades-long supporters of CAP - would introduce bills they wouldn't have supported otherwise, except for a trip, enables this "expose" to rise to the level of high-school journalism.

Pavarotti's singing reminds us, in Tonio's words, that "we are all men of flesh and blood, breathing the same air in this lonely world...let our hearts speak to you." This is the type of high drama you'll experience at Phoenix Opera – Pavarotti as Canio, in Pagliacci, smearing greasepaint on his face to hide his anguish and Leoncavallo's most beautiful love duet, which leads to his despair

In one of Dvorak's inspired love "duets," the incredible Piotr Beczala asks Renee Fleming the question many of us wonder: "Divine one, are you real?" The pathos of Rusalka's unhappy ending is clear: "I know you are only a vision that will vanish, disappearing in the mist. But until you do, stay with me."

Even Thoreau couldn't fully live off the grid. If you use the grid -- as we all do -- you can't expect others to pay for it. And you can't honestly call it a "tax" -- or claim your environmental virtue obviates your need to pay for the upkeep of the grid -- when the Corporation Commission insists you pay your fair share.

Jason Owsley Bob, the last paragraph essentially says that if a home with panels produces enough solar energy to sell said energy back to APS, then the homeowners wouldn't have to pay the $5 fee. Am I reading that right?

May 18 at 11:14am · Like

Bob Stump No - the property tax issue is an entirely separate one.

May 18 at 11:16am · Like

Jason Owsley Ah, I misread it. Tax aside, I wonder if it would make sense for APS to waive the fee each month that a home's panels produce enough energy to sell back to APS ($5 worth of energy or more). Maybe that could be a disarming compromise for opponents. Or maybe APS already is doing something like that?

Another breathless, credulous story on the so-called solar fee. Whenever you hear the catchy slogan, "Don't tax the sun," remember this: The "fee" on rooftop solar users passed by the Commission last year was to ensure that solar users pay for using their share of the grid, instead of shifting the cost to non-solar users. This is bipartisan, mainstream policy. It is an issue of fairness. Calling it a "tax" is politics.

When I think of my competitor, Michael Preston Green, I'm reminded of Ronald Reagan's description of George Bush: "A preppy, a Yalie, a sissy." It's a description you should ponder, before you vote. — at Arizona State Capitol

The late, great Arleen Auger never achieved the fame of her protegee, Renee Fleming, but she was a singer's singer until her death. What a voice.

A candidate for Corporation Commission says that (unlike the current Commission) he will "represent people, not corporations" and eschew "corporate special interests." Whether he means vertically-integrated utility companies or solar companies, he doesn't say. You might ask him: Which sectors of the energy economy in Arizona are "special interests"?

Der Spiegel reports that "German consumers already pay the highest electricity prices in Europe." Messrs. Holway and DuVal wish to bring such policies to Arizona, which now enjoys some of the lowest electricity rates in the country. They wish to change this. But it is helpful, at the very least, to know where they stand.

One of the great perks of public life is being nominated for the Arizona Capitol Times "Best Shoes" award. Last year, Yale dropout and lobbyist Michael Preston Green said, "I want to ensure that the Honorable Bob Stump does not win because my shoes deserve the honor." If Green has ever killed one of your bills, vote for me. If you wish to see me put him in his proper place, as I do in this video, vote for me. Thanks in advance

Gretchen Nady Jacobs Commissioner Stump - I am concerned that while you are toiling at your job - during the voting days - people at the Capitol mall won't be reminded of your sophisticated shoe sense. I think campaign signs on the House and Senate lawn and buildings are in order to keep it a level playing field.
