Longtime rivals race fair in Harvick's thrilling win

AVONDALE (AP) - When Kevin Harvick and Carl Edwards started bumping side-by-side on the final lap Sunday, many NASCAR fans had to recall the image of Edwards grabbing Harvick's throat in a 2008 garage altercation. Or maybe they thought about the time two years later when Harvick called Edwards "fake" and Edwards responded by saying he had "no respect" for Harvick. Six years later, there was no wild wreck and ensuing brawl between the longtime rivals. Just a clean, thrilling finish that left Harvick on top for a record eighth time at Phoenix International

Raceway. "I don't think there's any real love lost between the two of us," Harvick said after Sunday's 0.01-second Sprint Cup victory over Edwards. "I knew I was going to get hit, and I'm going to hit him in the same type of manner." Harvick, working on old tires on the overtime restart after Kasey Kahne hit the wall, turned into the charging Edwards first to try to slow his momentum. Edwards, who went from fourth to second on the restart with two fresh tires, returned the favor and got into Harvick's door. But as they came to the checkered flag at the mile oval, Harvick had his fifth win in six Phoenix races. "I don't want to spin him out, but you definitely want to rough him up because that's not the guy that I want to lose to," Harvick said. "And I know he doesn't want to lose to me." It was NASCAR's second photo finish in a month, the same margin of victory as Denny Hamlin over Martin Truex Jr. at the Daytona 500. There have only been six closer finishes since NASCAR began using electronic scoring in 1993. And this time, there was no throat grabbing or name-calling.

"Just a lot of fun," Edwards said. "I really wish it would have worked out a little bit differently, but it was a good race." Hamlin recovered from an early pit penalty to finish third. Kyle Busch, his Joe Gibbs Racing teammate, started from the pole and led the first 77 laps before ending up fourth. Dale Earnhardt Jr., who ended Harvick's four-race winning streak at Phoenix with a rain-shortened victory in November, was fifth. Harvick's weekend started slow when he qualified 18th on Friday. But he had the fastest car at the end of Saturday's last practice and meticulously worked his way to the front on Sunday. He took the lead for good in the No. 4 Chevrolet when he immediately passed Edwards on a restart with 77 laps to go. Harvick, who led a race-high 139 of 313 laps, built a lead approaching 3 seconds before the final caution. Harvick crew chief Rodney Childers decided to stay on the track while Edwards and others took on two tires. "I knew that he had been saving his stuff and thought we'd be OK," Childers said. "But every time, there's always seven or eight that stay out in that situation. And when there was only three, that turned into a little bit of panic mode for me." Harvick, though, found a way to win at what's become almost his personal track. By all but clinching a spot in the season-ending playoffs, he gave NASCAR four winners in four races from four race teams. And this time there was no bad blood between two fierce competitors. "It was kind of fun coming to the line because I thought, 'Man, I got him,'" Edwards said. "And then he doored me real hard and then he got a little run. Then I tried to door him and slow him down, but it just didn't work."

Educational bind for U.S. citizens in Mexico

By Kendal Blust
Arizona Sonora News

Natalie Guerrero Hernández wants to be a nurse when she grows up. Possibly.

"Medicine. Or also architecture or graphic design. Those are the things I like the most," she said.

Natalie is a soft-spoken 14-year-old who gets good grades and has big dreams for her future. She's thinking about college and the importance of an education for her future.

And that's why she's worried. Natalie is a U.S. citizen, but she lives and goes to school in Mexico. She's concerned that the education she is getting in Nogales, Sonora, won't give her the same opportunities as her peers living minutes away across the border.

"I think here you can't achieve anything, anything in life. I mean, professionally," Natalie said during an interview in her home in Nogales, Sonora. "That's what weighs on me the most."

Natalie is one of thousands of U.S. citizens attending schools in Mexico. During the 2013-14 school year, 289,727 children from the United States enrolled in Mexican public schools, according to the Secretary of Public Education (SEP) in Mexico. However, other estimates suggest that there are at least 600,000 school-aged U.S. citizens living in Mexico, many of whom are not accounted for because they are not in school.

Migration from the United States to Mexico has increased over the past 10 years. From 2005 to 2014, more people migrated from the United States to Mexico than the other way around, according to the Pew Research

Center. That means children and schools face many of the same challenges as U.S. schools in educating immigrant children.

In border communities like Nogales, many students with U.S. citizenship want to go to school in their country of birth. However, residency requirements make that challenging.

Students must prove that they live within the school district to attend Arizona public schools. The Nogales Unified School District asks families to provide documents demonstrating residency each year because of concerns that some students might provide a false address.

"We have open enrollment, so you don't have to live within the district to attend school here, but you have to be a resident of the United States," said Judith Mendoza-Jimenez, student services director for NUSD.

She emphasized that citizenship was not a requirement to register at an Arizona school. Proof of residency, however, was. Paying property taxes is what makes you eligible for public education, Jimenez said.

Despite living outside of the district, Natalie's family wants to send her to Nogales High School, just across border. In some cases, that might be possible. As a U.S. citizen, Natalie qualifies to go to school in the Nogales Unified School District. But only under certain conditions.

"Students who live in Mexico with a U.S. birth certificate can register to go to school here from kindergarten to high school. But they must pay tuition," Jimenez said. "Students who aren't U.S. nationals can pay tuition also, but only for one year."

To register, a parent or legal guardian must show up at district offices, she added.

In Natalie's case, the first barrier to attending school in the U.S. is the registration process. Neither of her parents has a visa to cross into Nogales, Ariz.

Pricing education

Even if Juana Hernandez Galaviz or her husband are able to obtain a visa and meet with Jimenez, Natalie's family would still be unable to send her to Nogales High School.

Tuition for students living in Mexico — whether citizens of the U.S. or Mexico — costs $5,700 per year. Even with her entire family contributing, they could not afford the $570 monthly payments, Hernandez Galaviz said.

Currently, only 13 of the 5,800 students registered in NUSD live in Mexico paying the non-resident tuition. All of those are U.S. citizens, according to Jimenez.

Students who attended school in the United States before returning to Mexico often face additional barriers. Children born in the United States often do not have the right documents to be enrolled in Mexican schools.

These include birth certificates and school records with an apostille, or official certification, from the Secretary of State where the child was living previously.

The documents must also be translated into Spanish. Tracking down that paperwork, or even figuring out exactly what is needed, can be a long, expensive and confusing process, according to the Institute for Women in Migration.

Some students are out of school for a year or more waiting for the documents. These students are not counted among the nearly 300,000 U.S. citizens enrolled in Mexican schools. Some parents are concerned that their children have become "invisible" in this education system, according to the Institute for Women in Migration.

Even when admitted to schools in Mexico, U.S. children sometimes struggle to adjust to the new system. Older children in particular face language or cultural barriers.

Priscilla Ochoa, a graduate student studying education in the U.S. and Mexico at the University of Sonora in Hermosillo, went through that transition 14 years ago, when she was 8. She and her older sister, both U.S. citizens, moved to Hermosillo halfway through the school year after their mother was deported.

At school, Ochoa struggled with Spanish. As a second-grader, she had only spoken English in an academic setting. She also said there were fewer resources, like meals for low-income students, and larger class sizes. She didn't feel safe.

There is a concern about the quality of education. Ochoa said she had some great teachers, but they were exceptions. "Over there, they teach you what you need to learn and that's it. If you need something else, they don't do it," Ochoa said.

Natalie's father, Juan Francisco Guerrero Zuniga, said schools in Mexico are less advanced and leave the students behind their peers in the United States. He and Hernandez Galaviz are most worried, though, that Natalie won't fit in when she is able to go to the United States someday.

"In reality she's from over there," he said. "But they'll see her as a foreigner, as a Mexican. She won't know English. She won't have the same academic advantages as everyone else."

Natalie's motivations to attend high school in the United States are similar. She wants to understand the culture and the language. She wants to prepare for a career and maybe even a chance to go to an American university. But without a U.S. education, she worries that won't be an option.

"I feel hopeless because I want to be there because that's where I'm from," she said.

Left behind

Some schools are trying to bridge this gap, catering to U.S. children on the Mexican side of the border. But they are limited, leaving the majority of U.S. citizens in Mexico unable to take advantage of these programs.

Natalie's family said they believe more should be done for the U.S. citizens who are living on the Mexico side of the border. They said it is their right to get a U.S. education as citizens of the country.

"Now that she's an adolescent, she begs me to go to school over there," Hernandez Galaviz said.

There are millions of children around the world who want a U.S. public education, said John Utne, the former student services director for NUSD. They can't provide that for everyone.

"It's just that these are, from where I sit right now, less than a mile away," Utne said of the students in Nogales, Sonora. "That makes it tough. I can walk out the door of my office and see the fence. That makes a difference."

RESEARCHERS TO STUDY NORMALLY SECRET JUVENILE COURT RECORDS

PHOENIX — Arizona's state court system is allowing a Washington, D.C.-based research nonprofit to examine data from normally confidential court records to examine ethnic and racial disparities in juvenile court proceedings.

An order signed last week by Supreme Court Chief Justice Scott Bales grants the American Institutes for Research's proposal to use the court records to conduct federally funded research to see why there are disproportionate numbers of minorities in the juvenile justice system.

Bales' order said the research should help policymakers learn more about the disproportionality of minorities at various points in the juvenile justice system, identify contributing factors and develop appropriate steps to take.

The research will build upon a study conducted for the Arizona Governor's Office for Children, Youth and Families by Arizona State University researchers and completed in 2014. The research by ASU's College of Public Service & Community Solutions concluded that disparities exist but have declined.

HEALTH OFFICIALS TROUBLED BY SYPHILIS SPIKE IN FRESNO COUNTY

FRESNO, Calif. — Fresno County health officials say the region's syphilis rates have spiked, leading them to ask for help from state and federal agencies.

The Fresno Bee reports that the sexually transmitted disease was nearly nonexistent in Fresno County six years ago. Medical workers say its return might be linked to drug use and prostitution.

State officials say Fresno County's syphilis rates were higher than every other county in California in 2015. Officials from the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the state Department of Public Health-Sexually Transmitted Disease Control Branch are working with the county to look for solutions to the health crisis.

EX-PRIEST, 83, PLEADS NOT GUILTY TO TEXAS WOMAN'S 1960 DEATH

EDINBURG, Texas — An 83-year-old former priest has pleaded not guilty to murder for the slaying of a South Texas teacher and ex-beauty queen more than a half century ago.

John Feit used a walker as he arrived in court Monday in Hidalgo County. He's accused of the April 1960 beating and suffocation of 25-year-old Irene Garza.

State District Judge Luis Singleterry set bond at $1 million. Feit was returned to Texas last week from Phoenix, where he was jailed since his arrest last month after prosecutors said they had new evidence against him. The nature of that evidence hasn't been disclosed. He long had been suspected in her death.

Authorities say Feit, then 27, killed Garza after hearing her confession at a Roman Catholic church in McAllen.

LEGISLATURE OKS BILL TO AVOID LAWSUIT ON PLASTIC BAG BANS

PHOENIX — The Legislature has passed two measures revising state law to get around a lawsuit over bans on plastic bags and disposable products.

The law originally passed last session prevents cities from banning disposable products and blocks cities from requiring business owners to report energy consumption.

Rep. Warren Petersen sponsored last year's bill and is now sponsoring legislation that splits the provisions into two separate measures.

Nevada court orders new trial in $100M Las Vegas Sands case

By KEN RITTER ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — With more than $100 million at stake, casino magnate Sheldon Adelson's company has been granted a do-over in a Las Vegas courtroom on the contested amount owed to a Hong Kong businessman for helping to secure lucrative business in Macau.

The Nevada Supreme Court called for a review of the $70 million that a jury awarded in 2013 to Richard Suen and his company, Round Square Co. Ltd., but did not overturn findings that Las Vegas Sands Corp. must pay.

Penalties and interest have added at least an additional $30 million to the amount, court filings say. Suen contends that meetings he arranged with Chinese officials helped Las Vegas Sands get crucial approval to build casinos in the Chinese gambling enclave.

"We hold there was insufficient evidence to support the jury's award of damages, and thus, a new trial on the issue of damages is warranted," the justices said Friday.

The billionaire's company welcomed the decision, though the court rejected several of its other appeals, including that it didn't get a fair trial and that the issue of damages should not have gone to a jury at all.

"The company has consistently maintained that whatever service Mr. Suen claims to have provided was only of nominal value and was wholly unrelated to the company earning its operating rights" in Macau, Las Vegas Sands said in a statement.

Suen's primary attorney, John O'Malley, declined to comment. Las Vegas Sands is the corporate owner of the Venetian and Palazzo casino resorts on the Las Vegas Strip. It operates four resorts in Macau, a former Portuguese colony about an hour by ferry from Hong Kong.

In this May 2015 photo, Las Vegas Sands Corp. Chairman and CEO Sheldon Adelson testifies in court in Las Vegas.

Suen filed the breach-of-contract lawsuit in 2004, and a jury found in his favor in 2008. Adelson's company won a new trial by arguing that jurors had been presented with evidence that was inadmissible hearsay.

Suen, who argues that he and his company were promised $5 million and 2 percent of net casino profits, demanded more money during the 2013 retrial by pointing to profits Las Vegas Sands had made in Macau since the first trial.

Company proposes marijuana oil plant in California's Central Valley

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COALINGA, Calif. — A Southern California company has proposed using a vacant San Joaquin Valley prison for growing marijuana and producing cannabis oil.

The Fresno Bee reports Monday that Ocean Growl Extracts made the proposal last month to the mayor and city manager of Coalinga, which owns the shuttered Claremont Custody Center.

The 77,000-square-foot facility was closed several years ago when the California Department of Corrections did not renew its contract.

City Manager Marissa Trejo detailed the economic benefits of the proposal at a City Council meeting early this month. Lease and tax payments would bring Coalinga nearly $2 million annually. The cannabis oil would be sold wholesale to dispensaries.

The company would also bring 100 full-time jobs to the city of 13,000 that is running a $3.3 million budget deficit.

"One company could take us out of the red in three years," said Mayor Tom Patrick Kough.

Security concerns were also addressed. Trejo said the company agreed to work with the police chief to link security cameras to the police dispatch center, perform background checks on all employees and to license its activities with the city.

The former prison already has gates, barbed-wire-topped fences and surveillance equipment.

Councilman Ron Lander recommended that the city sell the former prison to Ocean Growl so that "the city's name is not attached."

The city plans to invite medical marijuana representatives to the March 30 workshop to address public concerns.

The Legislature last year created the state's first comprehensive licensing scheme for medical marijuana businesses.

Some of the key features of the medical marijuana framework include requiring wholesale distributors to serve as links between growers and retail pot sellers and limiting how many licenses an individual or business can hold.
